

Kira Diligence for the General Counsel at Active Corporate Acquirers:

Accelerate Contract Review, Reduce Risk, Close and Evaluate Deals Faster

General Counsel should be close partners with corporate development, but legal departments often lack the people resources to perform due diligence in-house. Time and cost pressures often result in either scoping down the contract review process or skipping it altogether. Almost any contract could have a problematic restrictive covenant or indemnification language, yet, companies under cost pressure are willing to take that risk simply because they believe they cannot afford a more thorough review. Alternatively, companies send their contract review to non-law firm providers where the work may only be marginally more efficient.

Analyze provisions across a set of contracts.

What if there was a way to work within budget and still review all the necessary documents at a fraction of the traditional timeframe? Would you then enable your legal team to review contracts more thoroughly in the same amount of time it would take to review a subset? Would you review contracts with much greater accuracy than the non-law firm providers? How much risk would be mitigated? How much better value can you provide to your clients?
